DEBUT OF THE "WHAT THE HELL DID I JUST WATCH?" COMEDY VIDEO FESTIVAL

New Video Comedy Festival Will Feature Comedy Videos Without Regard To Production Value, Only Laugh Factor.

SEATTLE, Washington - June 12th, 2006 - Hey Pencil Jock! What are you doing on July 11th? Well drop it, because you're going to the "What The Hell Did I Just Watch?" Comedy Video Festival. This festival doesn't pander to the art house; it just cuts the fat and goes straight to the funny.

At 7:30pm and again at 8:45pm on July 11th the 'What The Hell Did I Just Watch?' comedy video festival will showcase several small video sketches, short films, and television pilots from around the world at the Rendezvous Jewel Box Theater in downtown Seattle.

Videos to be shown include:

When the Lord Attacks, a short film written and directed by Aaron Yonda. The Lord our savior, unless He happens to kill you. Real life footage of people being struck down when The Lord attacks.

Poker Tell, by sketch comedy group Oh! The Humanity. Some people have a subtle poker tell. Others...not so much.

Chuck and his Penis, a featured short film written and directed by Steven Barr. This "Found Footage" mockumentary traces Chuck Barr's life long relationship with his penis, from their carefree early days through Chucks stunning betrayal by relinquishing legal custody of his penis, and his penis's bitter plan of vengeance.

Other video pieces that may be shown include celebrated works from Stev-O Ibsen, Rufus Cubed Productions, Olde English, Dutch West, Secret Pants, SoCal Film Group, and many others. Each video in this one-hour showcase is handpicked for it's laugh factor, and nothing else.

The 'What The Hell Did I Just Watch?' festival was started, with the goal to showcase up and coming video comedians from venues such as the Internet, television, and film. The festival concentrates on showing the funniest produced comedy with a blind eye to production value, star power, or marketability. We simply want the funniest thing out there.
